I want to create a data structure that can support the following functionality: You have a number of posts on a site. It can be any size, but postcount will be finite. A "post" is an object, and it might have tags associated with it. A "tag" is a word, and it might be associated with multiple posts. I want to find all posts that contain a particular tag. should I just create a vector>> and keep adding elements to it? What would be the most efficient way to search for posts that match a tag, and how would I do that? Any code snippets, links, etc would be greatly appreciated! EDIT: Thank you so much for your quick responses! I have decided to go with the vector of vectors. In case the order doesn't matter, here's my implementation: class post { public: string tagName; vector tagIDs; vector postIDs; int postCount; }; void addTag

Cultural sensitivity is often described as "the respect one shows to diversity and understanding of people and cultures that are different." Unfortunately, many physical therapists lack a basic knowledge of the nature of ethnic culture. (1) To inform the profession that it needs to become more culturally competent and (2) to explain how common assumptions about people from different backgrounds can influence practice. The authors explore the theoretical and practical aspects of defining and respecting cultural difference through the example of ethnocentrism (the assumption that one's group is better than another and that the groups are mutually exclusive) and cultural pluralism (the belief that all peoples are equally important and that there are many different ways to interpret and understand any given cultural phenomenon). Implications for the field: It is necessary to work within a cultural framework that recognizes the existence of multiple cultures and that is aware of the social and psychological importance of cultures. Furthermore, it is important to understand the nature of cultural groups. This requires an awareness of political, religious, and other ideologies that may influence the practice of medicine. Finally, the profession needs to be more educated about the various cultural groups that it will encounter.Aortic valve replacement without cardiopulmonary bypass in a patient with acute aortic dissection and coronary artery occlusion. Acute aortic dissection is a life-threatening condition. In this report, we describe the case of a 65-year-old male with acute type A aortic dissection who underwent repair surgery with aortic valve replacement through a median sternotomy without cardiopulmonary bypass. The patient was successfully weaned from a respirator with inotropic support 5 days after the surgery. After elective surgery, the patient was weaned from a respirator without inotropic support, with an electrocardiogram showing regular sinus rhythm. The results suggest that patients with acute aortic dissection can undergo aortic valve replacement without cardiopulmonary bypass and can be weaned from a respirator. 0cc13bf012
