Q: Navigate to page defined in.xap file I'm working on a C# WinForms app (VS2017,.NET 4.7) that has been converted to a WinRTCD.xap file. The application uses a XAML UserControl called "Page1.xaml" to display the content of the.xap file. I'm trying to implement a click event that will open up Page1.xaml whenever the user clicks on an image on the UI. I've got the code to open the.xap file in an IE window running - no problem there - but I can't seem to navigate to the Page1.xaml from it. I'm trying to do something like this: private void button2_Click(object sender, EventArgs e) { Process xap = new Process(); xap.StartInfo.FileName = @".\Client.xap"; xap.Start(); var myNav = new Uri("Page1.xaml", UriKind.Relative); xap.MainWindowTitle = null; xap.LoadBaml(((XmlNamespaceManager)new XmlNamespaceManager(new NameTable()).GetNameTable()).NameTable); xap.Activate(); xap.MainWindowTitle = "Client Log"; xap.ContentView.Navigate(myNav); } The last line of the code above throws an error telling me "The URI scheme 'Page1.xaml' is not registered." Is there a better way to navigate to this xaml page? Thanks. A: Try this xap.StartInfo.Arguments = "x:\Client.xap"; 1. Q: Is there a way to turn Spring security into a system service? Is there a way to programmatically turn on / off spring security in an application? I'd like it to just check once per day or at a specific hour and not need to keep a master password of all the usernames and passwords in the DB in order to do my thing. What's the simplest / easiest way to do this if you have to manually turn it on and off on a day-to-day basis? I'm running on Spring 3.0.5 A: You can use the @Secured annotation to control access to certain URIs when there is a security context in the request. See, // config 1: basic web config that does not include security // you would still require a username and password for it to work // while this will provide access, it may be denied @Configuration public class

WebConfig1 extends WebMvcConfigurerAdapter{ @Override protected void configure(HttpSecurity http) throws Exception{ } } // config 2: basic web config that includes access for the entire site // In this case, there is no way for the user to provide a username/password // this will enable access @Configuration public class WebConfig2 extends WebMvcConfigurerAdapter{ @Override protected void configure(HttpSecurity http) throws Exception{ http.authorizeRequests() .antMatchers("/webjars/", "/static/", "/images/", "/resources/", "/").permitAll() .anyRequest().authenticated() .and().formLogin(); } } // config 3: basic web config that includes access for the entire site, // as well as if you have a username and password // will authorize with Spring Security @Configuration public class WebConfig3 extends WebMvcConfigurerAdapter{
